Strayed or Stolen,

FROM the Fair Ground in Richmond county, on the night of the 14th inst., a dark bay HORSE, about 6 or 7 years old, in good working order, with two saddle marks on his back; one on his wethers, on the right side, (the hair not off,) one under the hamstring, the hair off. He is over the common height; uncommonly sway back; racks and walks well, and holds his head well up; has a good coat of hair. He had saddle, bridle, and martingales on him, and a pair of old shoes on his fore feet. I have no doubt he was stolen, and will pay any reasonable reward for his delivery to me, or for information sufficient to convict the thief.

A Valuable Medicine.

The Best of PILLS.

25 IN A BOX.

DR. BRANDRETH'S Vegetable PILLS have proved themselves an effectual assistant of nature, having cured in the United States at least one hundred thousand persons of diseases which had been pronounced incurable by medical men of the first rank and standing.

These Pills, from the peculiar properties they possess, are calculated to cure disease, whatever be its name, all having the same origin, in any person in whom is the universal "breath of life," who partakes of the "universal" "one blood," of which are made all people who dwell upon the earth, and whose disorder arises from the "universal root" of all disease, namely, impurity or imperfect circulation of the blood. Those who are suffering from a bad state of health, will do well to give them a trial.

OBSERVER.

FAYETTEVILLE:

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, DEC. 9, 1845.

LARGE TURNIPS.—Our good Whig friend, John McNeill, near Philadelphus, Robeson county, brought us last week a couple of Turnips, the largest of which measured 31 1-2 inches in circumference, and the other was nearly as large.

THE DISMAL SWAMP CANAL.—We confess our surprize at the large amount of North Carolina produce which passes through this outlet to the Norfolk market in Virginia. Among the items, in the year ending 30th Sept. last, we find upwards of a million of bushels of corn, thirty-one millions of Shingles, more than seven millions of Staves, 6,532 bales of Cotton, 43,864 bbls. of Fish, 166,000 lbs. of Bacon, 112,668 bushels of Wheat, Peas, Potatoes, and Flaxseed, 20,526 bbls. Naval Stores, &c. &c. The goods forwarded from Norfolk by the Canal bear a proportion to this large receipt of produce.

The notorious Empire Club gave a grand Ball at Tammany Hall on Friday Evening the 28th ult., which was attended by the respectable portion of the party, who thus, for party purposes, gave their countenance to a set of men, many of whom have been in the Penitentiary. On the night of the Ball an officer arrested, on a warrant for keeping a disorderly house, two women of the town, who had been to the Ball, and were on their way home under the escort of an official dignitary! They were lodged in the Tombs! So says the Tribune.

FIRE IN PETERSBURG.—A number of buildings were destroyed by fire in Petersburg on the 29th ult., among them two Tobacco Factories, belonging to Mr. Jas. Orr, and Messrs. Osborne & Bragg, and the dwelling house of Mr. E. H. Osborne. Loss 40 to $50,000, about half insured.

The Mecklenburg Jeffersonian speaks of the Editor of the Observer as a "Monarchical Federalist," the Observer as a "blue-light Federal paper," and, (among other Whig papers,) as asserting "that England's title to Oregon is better than ours,"—with much more of the same nature. It is difficult to realize, that any person placed in the conspicuous station of Editor of a public journal, can so far sacrifice his own self-respect, (if he have any, which is doubtful,) as to make assertions like the above, so wanting in even the appearance of truth. And it is equally surprising, that he should fancy his readers to be such a set of utter ignoramuses as would be implied in the idea that they could relish such stuff. We have not a high opinion, as may be supposed, of the intelligence of a people who rely on the Jeffersonian for information; but we think better of them than that.

MR. CALHOUN.—There seems to be a universal conviction that Mr. Calhoun's late trip to Memphis, and his course and opinions there, are the commencement of a new canvass for the Presidency. Indeed, it is supposed that the Convention was gotten up for his especial benefit, to enable him to see the people of the great West at their own homes, and to "define his present position" on the Internal Improvement doctrines. This supposition is strengthened by the remarkable fact, that not a solitary Georgian was present at Memphis—the people of Georgia having no love for Mr. Calhoun, and not being disposed to unite in any scheme for his advancement.

The Memphis Convention and its latitudinarian doctrines.—We have seen this body lately assemble, (says the Richmond Whig,) and under the lead of John C. Calhoun, and the influence of his opening address, assert doctrines in respect to the powers of the Federal Government more extravagant, latitudinarian and Federal than were ever before claimed for it, except by Mr. Calhoun himself, in his report as Secretary of War under Mr. Monroe. The amount of these doctrines is, that Congress have the power of improvement and appropriation for every Western river which, in any imaginable state of things, may be important for defence! This includes the right of expenditures to unlimited amounts, and proclaims the right rule of construing the Federal compact to be expediency, and the advantage of powerful sections. Here in Virginia we have been unable, through the very influence of Mr. Calhoun's followers, to obtain an appropriation to open the James River! But the powerful, and soon to be all-powerful West, in President making, suggests her wishes, dictated by her interests, to have a Ship Canal from the Lakes to the Mississippi, which will cost more than the Revolutionary War, and to have the Mississippi regarded as an "Inland Sea" to justify Congress in lavishing millions upon it, and forthwith these doctrines, agreeable to the West, become legitimate and constitutional!

The cupidity of the West is quite natural, but the facility of the self-constituted leader of State rights, endorsing these monstrous pretensions, would be inexplicable, if his previous history did not show him to be one who tested every thing in the crucible of his inexorable Presidential ambition.

But we are happy to see that his partisans may refuse to follow him in this new extravagance.

[The Whig here alludes to the Charleston Mercury, which says that "If the Federal Government may do all that the resolutions of the Convention propose, we can see no limit whatever to its power of engaging in internal improvements." The "Union" also intimates its dissent from Mr. Calhoun's present doctrines.]

Here comes old Buncombe again!—We are informed by Mr. Alexander Porter, the manager on the farm of Thos. T. Patton, Esq., that an acre of corn was planted on the farm the last season with which it was designed to contend for the prize offered by the Buncombe County Agricultural Society, and that a few days since the corn was gathered and measured, and the yield was one hundred and thirteen bushels and a half! Mr. Patton will no doubt take the prize. His farm is on Swannano river.

Highland Messenger.

Escape from Prison.—On Saturday night last, James Bryan, of whose capture and attempt to cut his throat, we made mention some weeks ago, effected his escape from our Jail, by opening a passage through the roof, and letting himself down with blankets tied together.

Raleigh Register.

FROM THE N. E. WEEKLY REVIEW.

THE MAN WITH THE MOUSTACHES.

It was a warm Saturday afternoon in August that a horseman turned up to the inn that fronts the steepleless meeting house of a small village in the interior of New England. As usual in the warm Saturday afternoons of summer, the male portion of the villagers were assembled at the tavern—some drinking punch like water, and others, the 'regular old soakers,' discussing the merits of pure 'New England.' Some were stretched out half-asleep, and if the truth must be told, half-intoxicated, under the shade of two venerable elms, which overlooked the highway in front of the inn, while others were seated in the window seats of the bar room gravely arguing upon matters spiritual and political.

But the unusual appearance of a stranger roused every one into the attitude of curiosity. He was mounted on an elegant horse, and as he reined him up before the door, every eye was turned upon him. He was somewhat tall—with a diminutive waist which would have answered to the similitude of Falstaff—"an Eagle's talon"—and legs of most inordinate length, furnished with a close covering of light cloth—looking for all the world, like a couple of ox goads with eel skins drawn over them. His dark frock finely contrasted with his light vest and open bosom, ornamented with pearl studs and glittering safety chains. A broad stock of black silk elevated his chin to an angle of forty-five degrees, and supported a collar of linen starched to the stiffness of sheet iron, and which protruded on each side of his chin like the horn of a Rhinoceros. Above, a huge pair of whiskers extended from ear to ear, with the trifling exception of a square inch or two of his chin, over which the tonsorial implement had evidently recently passed. His upper lip was garnished by enormous moustaches, which bristled fiercely upward and covered a moiety of either cheek. His hat was most exquisitely small, cone-like, and pitched with admirable effect upon the left side of his head, while huge masses of hair, tumbled up carelessly at his temples, were left wholly uncovered.

The stranger dismounted and entered the inn, without deigning a glance to the right or left. 'He's a Spaniard or a Portugeser,' said one, in a low whisper, to his companions. 'Look at his beard!' said another; 'Oh, what legs!' said a third. One after another the loungers gave in their opinion, and none could agree as to the precise character of the walking phenomenon before them. An old sailor said it was a Turkish Bashaw—while an itinerant preacher as strenuously affirmed that the being who had appeared, 'in such a questionable shape,' was none other than the famous Lorenzo Dow.

The stranger had in the meantime reached the centre of the bar-room. Elevating a glass to his eye, he looked around, for the first time, upon the company. 'Landlord, said he, 'show me my room, and let me have supper immediately.'

'Our supper is just ready,' said the landlord, 'will you take a seat with us?'

The man of moustache and whisker took off his hat, ran his fingers through his hair, until it stood out as wildly as the locks of a Lapland wind-stealer. 'Sir!' said he, 'I am a gentleman, and I choose to eat alone—demme if I don't,' and he looked around on the company with the most sovereign contempt.

From this there was, of course, no appeal; and the man of whiskers was shown to his apartment, and supper was prepared agreeably to his directions. The waiting maid was none other than the fair daughter of the innkeeper—a girl in her seventeenth year, with a bright black eye, and dark natural ringlets. The whiskered gentleman, as the bright Hebe seated herself at the table, to wait upon his gastronomic operations, stared at her for some time with the most provoking assurance. The girl blushed up to the dark shadow of her ringlets.

'Curse me,' said the gentleman at length, 'but you are a devilish handsome girl.'

The fair waiter blushed yet deeper—and tried to smile away her confusion. Luckily for her, the substantial fare of the table at that moment caught the eye of her admirer, and completely occupied all his faculties for the next half hour. The supper finished, the stranger arose, strutted to the glass—pinched up his dickey—and twisted his moustaches into a still fiercer erection.

'Ha—my pretty miss' said he, as he flung his arm around the neck of the fair waiter, who in the performance of her household duties had chanced to approach him—'you're too handsome for a country girl.' And he bent his whiskers to her face, as he attempted to kiss her.

The moustaches would unquestionably have suffered had not the fair one's hands been filled with the emptied dishes of the supper table. As it was she bounced out of the room in high dudgeon; and our somewhat disconcerted hero was left to his own reflections during the remainder of the evening.

The girl, as was undoubtedly her duty, immediately related the circumstances of the offence she had received at the hands of the whiskered traveller, to the keeper of her father's bar room, who had for some time been her acknowledged lover. She should not have cared so much about it, she said, if the fellow had looked and acted like a Christian; but to have such a good for nothing heathen poking his beard in her face, was what she wouldn't bear nor touch to—she wouldn't, she knew she wouldn't. The twain forthwith resolved upon vengeance, and that very night was fixed for its execution.

It was midnight—all was still in the inn, save that here and there the sonorous noise of some uneasy sleeper, 'made the night hideous' with somniferous melody. The stranger in moustaches had fallen into a quiet sleep, with his pillow so adjusted as to prevent any collision with the hairy appendages of his countenance. He was roused into consciousness by the entrance of the stout barkeeper and his pretty waiter of the preceding evening. He rubbed his eyes and raised himself half upright. The barkeeper placed a basin of warm water, a shaving box and razors, and a huge pair of sheep shears upon the stand at the bedside.

'What do you want?' demanded the whiskered gentleman, in a tone vacillating between resolution and terror.

'To shave you,' was the laconic reply.

In vain the dandy remonstrated, swore, and wept by turns—the barkeeper was inexorable. Brandishing his naked razor he commanded him to be quiet, under the penalty of a clipped weasand. Exhausted by agitation and terror—our unfortunate hero sunk down on his pillow, and suffered the brush to pass over his countenance without resistance. The girl with a grin of the most exquisite satisfaction, held the light, while her lover applied his dull and jagged razor to the hairy honors of the stranger. Whisker and moustache fell one after another—all beautiful as they were, and deeply treasured as they had been. The wretched dandy, like the wounded Robespierre, lay with his eyes closed, and silent, save when a dull groan or smothered curse told when the tonsorial instrument acted in the double capacity of clearing knife and stump digger.

'Now for his hair, Jane,' said the barber, and the formidable sheep-shears went clipping amid the curled and perfumed locks of our hero. In a few moments he was left whiskerless and hairless—an excellent candidate for a wig. 'Good night to you Mister!' said the barber, as he gathered up his apparatus and left the room, 'the next time you attempt to kiss a country girl you will have a smooth face for it.'

The next morning, at breakfast, inquiries were made relative to the gentleman in whiskers—and the landlord on entering his room in the morning, found it completely vacated. The hero had disappeared, leaving nothing save his hair, behind. The ostler stated that just at daylight a wild-looking, bald-headed being came rushing into the stable and demanded his horse. It was no sooner furnished than he threw himself into the saddle and plunged into the highway with the speed of life and death. The facts of the case soon appeared, and the melancholy mishap of the dandy with the moustaches, became a standing subject of merriment to the tenants and loungers of the inn.

Counterfeit Mexican Dollars.—The New Orleans Picayune of the 23d ultimo, says: We were shown yesterday a counterfeit Mexican dollar so ingeniously done that the most expert and practised money-counters might be deceived by it. The dies represent it to be a coin of the mint of Potosi, 1845, and are well executed. The counterfeit consists of two plates of silver, of the value of 12 1-2 cents each, over a piece of copper or brass. The plates are distinct from the copper; the base and pure metals are not mixed, and hence the counterfeit will stand the trial of chemical agents. The mint marks, figures, &c., are of course stamped upon the pure silver plates, which are joined on the edge of the dollar so neatly as to defy scrutiny. The ring is defective. A considerable number of them have been put in circulation. The Picayune remarks that "the fellow who invented this counterfeit has more than ingenuity enough to make a good living at any honest calling."

Specie.—According to a statement in the Picayune of the 12th ultimo, the banks of New Orleans had over six millions of dollars in specie, in their vaults.

An Oddity.—The following colloquy took place a few mornings since between a justice and an unmitigated loafer. 'What's your name?' 'Thomas I. Cann.' 'Where do you live?' 'Where I can.' 'How do you live?' 'How I can.' Very well, said the Justice, I can send you to Blackwell's Island, do you think you can live there, Thomas?' 'I can, for I've tried it,' said the fellow, and he was led off.

POETRY.

Our readers, many of them, may remember an extract published a short time since from the "Lowell Offering," headed "The Wasted Flowers." In the Savannah Georgian we find the extract rendered into the sweetest poesy by one of Georgia's gifted sons, Judge Charlton, of Savannah.—South Carolinian.

"BRING BACK MY FLOWERS."

A child sat by a limpid stream
And gazed upon the tide beneath,
Upon her cheek was joy's bright beam,
And on her brow, a blooming wreath;
Her lap was filled with blushing flowers,
And as the clear brook babbled by,
She scattered down the rosy showers;
With many a wild and joyous cry,
And laughed to see the mingling tide,
Upon its onward progress glide.

And time flew on—and flower by flower
Was cast upon the sunny stream,
But when the shades of eve did low'r,
She woke up from her blissful dream:
"Bring back my flowers," she wildly cried.
"Bring back my flowers I flung to thee,"
But echo's voice alone replied,
As danced the streamlet down the lea:
And still amid night's gloomy hours,
In vain she cried—"Bring back my flowers."

Oh, maiden! who on time's swift stream
Dost gaily see thy moments flee,
In this poor child's delusive dream,
An emblem thou may'st find of thee!
Each moment is a perfumed rose,
Into thy hand by mercy given,
That thou its fragrance might dispose,
And let its incense rise to heaven;
Else when death's shadow o'er thee lowers
Thy heart will wail—"bring back my flowers."

FROM THE PHILADELPHIA NORTH AMERICAN.

"THE SPECTATOR"—"SIMON SUGGS."

Carey and Hart have been publishing lately a series of books of humor, chiefly by South-Western men, and illustrated by our own admirable artist, Felix O. C. Darley. Among the authors whose names are given, are T. B. Thorpe, editor of the New Orleans Commercial Times, and Mr. Hooper, of Alabama. Thorpe wrote "Tom Owen, the Bee Hunter," and many other stories and sketches, which for genuine originality, richness of humor, felicitous description and illustration, etc., have hardly been equalled in this country. We shall pay our respects to him in a few days, upon the appearance of a work of his now in the press here. 'Simon Suggs,' by Hooper, demands our present attention. We may startle the reader by comparing parts of it with the best of English classics, the "Spectator"—Simon Suggs with Joseph Addison; but Simon is not always below the chaste Englishman.

The story of Inkle and Yarico, from the Spectator, is as favorable a specimen as can be chosen of the best manner of Addison. We quote it, and annex an episode from Mr. Hooper—faultless in the beautiful simplicity of the style, with a moral to bring blushes to the white man's face,—which is worthy of such companionship.

THE STORY OF INKLE AND YARICO.

BY ADDISON.

It would seem that Inkle, a young adventurer in the West Indies, went on shore with a number of his companions, who were, except himself killed by the natives. Inkle escaped, and by his light flowing hair and other bloodisharms, won the good will of an Indian girl, who at some risk to herself, provided him with food and various delicacies, and adorned his cave with the trophies given to her by her Indian admirers. In the meantime a language mutually understood was framed, and Inkle spent his time in explaining to Yarico how delighted he should be to take her to his native land, dress her with taste, and afford her the luxuries of a comfortable house, and a carriage to keep her from exposure to the weather; and all this he promised her the enjoyment of, without the danger and alarm that there affected their intercourse. Yarico, properly instructed, and burning with desire to please Inkle, hastened to him with the news of a ship in the offing; she made signals, and in the night accompanied him to the ship, which was bound for Barbadoes, a place at that time where a ship from the main, on first sight, was visited by the planters from the shore, who wished to purchase oxen, horses, or Indians, as slaves, to quote literally.

Mr. Thomas Inkle, now coming into English territory, began seriously to reflect upon his loss of time, and to weigh with himself how many day's interest of his money he had lost during his stay with Yarico. This thought made the young man pensive, and careful what account he should be able to give his friends of his voyage. Upon which consideration, the prudent and frugal young man sold Yarico to a Barbadian merchant; notwithstanding that the poor girl, to incline him to commiserate her condition, told him that she was with child by him; but he only made use of that information to rise in his demands upon the purchaser.

THE STORY OF LITKA AND HER LOVER.

FROM "SIMON SUGGS."

There are few of the old settlers of the Creek territory in Alabama, who do not recollect the great Indian Council held at Dudley's store, in Tallapoosa county, in September, of the year 1835. In those days, an occasion of the sort drew together white man and Indian from all quarters of the "nation"—the one to cheat, the other to be cheated. The agent appointed by the Government to "certify" the sales of Indian lands was always in attendance; so that the scene was generally one of active traffic. The industrious speculator, with his assistant, the wily interpreter, kept unceasingly at work in the business of fraud, and by every species and art of persuasion, sought—and, sooner or later, succeeded—in drawing the untutored children of the forest into their nets. If foiled once, twice, thrice, a dozen times, still they kept up their pursuit. It was ever the constant trailing of the slow track dog, from whose fangs there was no final escape!

And where are these speculators now?—those lords of the soil—the men of dollars—the fortune-makers who bought with hundreds what was worth thousands!—they to whom every revolution of the sun brought a reduplication of their wealth? Where are they, and what are they, now? They have been smitten by the hand of retributive justice! The curse of their victims has fastened upon them, and nine out of ten are houseless, outcast, bankrupt! In the flitting of ten years the larger portion have lost moneys, lands, character, every thing! And the few who still retain somewhat of their once lordly possessions, mark its steady, unaccountable diminution, and strive vainly to avert their irresistable fate—an old age of shame and beggary. They are cursed, all of them—blighted, root and trunk and limb! The Creek is avenged! Avenged, and for what! Ask you reader! Let us tell you a little story:

We knew, at the period to which this chapter refers, an Indian who refused to sell his land on any terms. He was a sturdy, independent fellow; one of the few who would not be contaminated by intercourse with the whites. His land was very valuable, and many speculators were, therefore, anxious to purchase it. So desirable was it, that several would, perhaps, have paid the "Sky chief" half its actual value to obtain it; but the "Sky chief" resolutely persisted in resisting all their arts; and he was too well known to make it practicable to get it by hiring some thieving Indian to personate him before the certifying agent. But "Suddo Micco" had a daughter, a very pretty girl of fifteen—slightly made, with a Grecian face, and long coal black hair; and her name was Litka. Well! Litka went to a dance—the green corn dance of her people—and it was conceded, that in her new calico frock and profusion of blue and red ribbons, and her silver buckles, she was one of the handsomes' girls on the ground. Among her admirers was a young man named Eggleston—a sub-partner or "striker," of the great Columbus Land Company. Eggleston told a sweet tale to the Indian girl, and she—as he was a very handsome young man—believed it all. He told her that he would marry her and take care of her, and of her father; and that when the rest of the tribe should be forced to Arkansas, they could stay with him in their old home, by the graves of their fathers. The "long and short" of all this was, that the white man and Indian girl were married according to the Creek custom; Suddo Micco having willingly assented to an arrangement by which he expected to be permitted to remain upon the soil which contained the bones of his ancestors.

For a few months Eggleston treated Litka and Suddo Micco very well, and they confided in him implicity. Then he told his wife that her father must "certify" his land to him, or "bad white men" might contrive to get it. Litka told the old "Sky chief" what her husband said, and the simple-minded Indian said it was "a good talk," and that his "white man son" should do as he pleased. So the "Sky chief" "certified" his land to his son-in-law, and the certifying agent saw a thousand silver dollars paid to the Indian, who within ten minutes afterwards returned them. Then Eggleston deserted Litka, and sold the land for three thousand dollars. Suddo Micco fumed and raved—but what good could that do? And Litka, poor thing! was almost broken-hearted.—And last of all, Suddo Micco begged his son-in-law, as he had got his land for nothing, and his daughter was too near her confinement to walk on foot, to get him a little wagon and a horse to take them to Arkansas. But Eggleston laughed in his face, and told him that a wagon would cost too much money. So Suddo Micco was compelled to wait until the Government removed his people, and then he went in one of the "public" wagons, among the "poor" of his tribe. For this, and such as this—as we have shown—is the Creek avenged!

"I WANT MY MOTHER."

We would be proud to claim the paternity of the following little sketch from the New Orleans Delta:

Many a hearty laugh used Mrs. Fitzwilliam to extort from us with her well assumed ejaculation of an over-breaded and over-buttered spoiled child. "I've lost my mama! where's my ma-ma! Mam-a! Mamma-a! I've lost my ma-ma!" But a feeling of a very opposite nature arose in our mind yesterday, as, passing the Old Basin, we were attracted by the semisuppressed sobs of a little girl, to whom bread and butter, or at least an overplus of it seemed a stranger. Her face unwashed, her hair was uncombed; her dress was dirty, and as she sat by a wood-pile, tears trickled at intervals down her cheeks. Young as she was, she seemed to feel—and to feel keenly—that she had been bereft of a mother's care. "What is the matter!" we asked her. "I want my mother," she replied, and in a tone which showed the want was not to be supplied. "Why do you not go home!" said we. "I want my mother," was the answer. Here, buy apples," we said, offering her a small silver piece. "I want my mother," she said, refusing, or at least not stretching out her hand to take it. A neighbouring woman saw us talk to the child and she briefly told us the history of her early privation.

Her father lives hardly. His poverty compels him to be from home daily to his labor. Her mother, a woman of the kindest maternal affections, died last week of the scarlet fever. Daily does the little girl sit at the wood-pile, shunning all associations with her former playmates, and her constant reiteration is—"I want my mother! I want my mother!" We understand that a humane gentleman in the neighborhood is about to have her placed in one of the asylums.

J. C. THOMSON

WOULD take this method of informing his friends and the citizens of Fayetteville, with the surrounding country, that owing to the late Fire, he has removed his

HAT, CAP, AND SHOE STORE

To Gillespie street, in the Tin Store occupied by Mr. F. T. Ward, where he would be happy to wait on all such as may favor him with a call; and hopes that all those wishing to buy Goods to suit the pressure of the times will visit him, as he is determined to sell cheap for Cash, and for Cash only—preferring the nimble sixpence to the slow shilling.

☞ Don't forget the place, on the East side of Gillespie street, midway between the Market Square and the State Bank. ☜

He would also acknowledge his thanks to the public for their liberal patronage, and still hopes to merit a continuance of the same, by promptness and strict attention to business.

Sands' Sarsaparilla.

For the Removal and Permanent Cure of all Diseases arising from an impure state of the Blood, or habit of the System,

NAMELY: Scrofula or King's Evil, Rheumatism, Obstinate Cutaneous Eruptions, Pimples or Pustules on the Face, Blotches, Blue, Chronic Sore Eyes, Ringworm or Tetter, Scald Head, Enlargement and Pain of the Bones and Joints, Stubborn Ulcers, Syphilitic Symptoms, Sciatica or Lumbago, and diseases arising from an injudicious use of the Mercury, Ascites or Dropsy. Exposure or Imprudence in life. Also, Chronic constitutional disorders will be removed by the Preparation.

The operation of this preparation is three-fold. It acts as a tonic, strengthening the digestive power and restoring the appetite, as an aperient, peculiarly suited and gentle in its laxative effect, and as an antiseptic, purifying the fluids of the body, and neutralizing in the blood the active principle of disease. The many well authenticated cures of Scrofula of the most malignant character, wrought by Sands's Sarsaparilla, have given it a wide and deserved celebrity. But it is not alone in Scrofula nor in the class of diseases to which it belongs, that this preparation has been found beneficial. It is a specific in many diseases of the skin, and may be administered with favorable results in all; it also exercises a controling influence in bilious complaints; and when the system has been debilitated either by the use of powerful mineral medicines or other causes, it will be
